A Quarter Life Crisis Andrew Smith

"You know that some day in the far and distant future our grandchildren will look back on this as some kind of golden age, and isn't that the most depressing thought in the world?" Floyd is a part of Generation Debt. He, like his friends, feels undervalued, underpaid and unappreciated. As the recession bites he feels closer to losing a job he hates for a company he's bored of. His journey begins with a breakup, and soon he finds himself in a new and unpredictable spiral of sex, drugs and Scrabble. In an ever changing world it seems like his only constants are his cynical friends, his dysfunctional family and Sunday Night Wine.
