Me 'N' Alvin : Growing Up in the Great Depression Thad Box

" Stories of swimming in stock tanks, selling watermelons, and skinning skunks are contrasted with all day preaching, Sunday dinners, and being put off the farm in this first hand account of surviving the Great Depression. Poems tell the story of folks who "didn't know we was poor 'cause nobody had no money." Vernacular, yet poetic, language of farmers brings to life the culture of Central Texas during a time of enormous social and economic change. Thad Box's poems give a kid's-eye view of the joys of a loving family surviving off the land. Change from subsistence farming to a money economy brought by Roosevelt's New Deal brings tears and chuckles as two young boys struggle to figure out the facts of life."
